This weekend training event, presented by the State Preparedness Training Center and the Office of Counter Terrorism, is a series of workshops, seminars and practical exercises designed to educate the first response community in the signs, indicators and tactics used by a potential terrorist. The focus of the series will be on the observation of behavioral characteristics associated with terrorism activities and the recognition of suspicious items typically associated with Improvised Explosive Devices (IEDs). Students will also be introduced to an online course and classroom presentation on how to avoid becoming a victim of an active shooter. The series of classroom presentations will culminate into a practical exercise where students will be able to view crowd behaviors and determine, based on behavioral indicators, persons that are exhibiting indicators associated with potential terrorist act pre-operational activities. Students will also be placed into a realistic training environment and be asked to identify items that are deemed suspicious. A working dinner and case study of a recent terrorist event will take place on Saturday evening.

At the conclusion of this course You Will:

- Identify indicators of a potential terrorist attack;
- Explain major considerations in isolating incident scenes and conducting evacuations during a terrorist incident.
- Prepare emergency responders and others who are involved in incident response to perform safely and effectively during incidents of terrorism involving energetic materials.
- Instill participants with respect for the destructive potential of energetic materials that may be used by terrorists in a WMD incident.
- Recognize the importance of integrating the Screening of Persons by Observational Techniques (SPOT) into the protection of local assets.
- Be aware of current trends involving terrorist activity.
- Recognize behavioral characteristics often associated with terrorist pre-attack indicators (PAIN).
- Discuss threat and vulnerability assessments and how they can be used to improve security.
- Demonstrate recognition of potential IEDs in a realistic training environment.
